Course Overview

This course will introduce you to the main political institutions and actors in Britain today. It will focus upon the historical and cultural context of British politics and detailed consideration will be given to competing political ideas and ideologies, divergent conceptual methods drawn from the social sciences and popular perceptions of British politics. The overarching framework will be consideration of Britain as a changing liberal democracy and an examination will be made of what Britain shares and what differentiates it from other liberal democracies such as the U.S.A. and other European Union states. Some of the latter are unitary (as is the U.K.) others are federal.

Britain is arguably the world’s oldest parliamentary democracy. It has an apparently confusing set of political institutions that combine historical continuity and change to modernity. Britain is heralded as a modern, free and democratic country, yet the head of state is a hereditary monarch, and there is an established church under the protection of the monarch. There is a bicameral legislature, yet one chamber is not elected. There are liberties under common law and it is only recently that human rights were codified and become an integral part of British law. There is a constitution but it is not written in a single document. Elections are free and corruption is virtually non-existent, and the electorate take a lively interest in political matters, as befits a free popular democracy. Nevertheless, there is no separation of powers, rather the reverse, in fact, and the electoral system has created a distorted political system, dominated by a Party that won just 35% of the vote on a turnout of 61% of those eligible to vote, but which has a majority of 66 seats in the House of Commons. As you may discover while you are here, there is also a culture of pervasive secrecy in public life, despite the fact that the Government is in favour of the citizen’s right to know.

At the social and cultural level mainland Britain is a strongly homogeneous and consensual polity. Religion, race, language, ethnicity, nationality all figure in society, but have not so far translated into major political cleavages. Social class is still more significant as it has been for more than a century.

Since 1973 Britain has been a member of the European Union and this has had a profound effect on British politics. It is an issue that cuts right across traditional divisions, and, at times, has come close to destroying the basic two party political system in the U.K. More recently, Scotland and Wales gained the right to govern themselves with regard to devolved matters. All these factors have contributed to causing the ‘British’ to question exactly who they are and what is their place in the modern world.
In June 2007, after ten years as Prime Minister, Tony Blair was replaced by Gordon Brown, who promised to govern in a different manner to that of his predecessor. He has, in fact, had a torrid time over the last seventeen months. The Conservative and Liberal Democrat leaders are also new to their posts since the last general election, and for the first time in a decade, the Conservatives are widely seen to be the favourites to win the next general election, which is likely to take place in 2010. Add to that the fact that London has a new and controversial, Conservative Mayor as it gears up for the next Olympics and you can see why it is an interesting time to be in London!

The course aims to give you a thorough, if basic, knowledge of political Britain, preparing you for your internship placements, and hopefully giving you an enjoyable experience at the same time!

The main teaching method will be by lecture but the classes will be interactive and you will be expected to participate fully.

Required Reading

Please purchase and read:

The Prime Minister: The Office and its Holders Since 1945
The Secret State
M. Moran, British Politics and Society
M. Moran, Politics and Governance in the UK
C. Pilkington, Issues in British Politics
The above list is a sample, the most up-to-date, of an excellent collection of references on British politics. You will have no trouble finding out all you need to know. In addition, you are expected to purchase and read a “serious” British broadsheet newspaper such as The Guardian, The Financial Times, the Independent, The Telegraph or The Times. There are also excellent weekly publications such as The Economist, New Statesman and Society etc. The required texts provide very good academic analysis but you are required to be as up-to-date as possible with your political information. There are also very current affairs programs such as Newsnight on BBC 2, (no commercial breaks) and Channel Four News.

Assessment of the Course

There will be an end of course final examination of two hours in which you are required to answer two examination questions. There will also be an essay of 2500 words, to be handed in at the end of the course on an approved topic. In the third week there will be a class test. The examination will count for 50% of the final grade, the paper 30% and the test 10%, and another 10% will be allocated for participation and attendance.

Your grades will be based on the following criteria: the relevance of your answer to the topic chosen, clarity of expression and continuity, explicit evidence of having read the main information and arguments in the required and supplementary reading. In addition, extra credit will be given for the strategic use of up-to-date illustrative material from the press or other media consulted.

Grading

Please refer to the Academic Handbook for detailed grading criteria, attendance requirements and policies on plagiarism: http://www.bu-london.co.uk/files/images/ACADEMICHANDBOOKSU09.pdf.

Attendance will be used to moderate final grades and a register will be taken at each session. Absenteeism from class without adequate written justification will result in a diminution of final grade on a pro-rata basis. Conversely, excellent attendance will result in an upgrade of the classification where the final examination standard is borderline.
Schedule and Basic Reading

Please note that precise sections, where relevant, are given below, but you are strongly encouraged to research each topic from the additional reading suggested, and the wider range of books available. Other reading will be suggested in class.
