1990s

JUDITH A. MCKENZIE (GRS'94) York, Maine

and a friend of Cheffers' for more than 30 years.

Cheffers led the Human Movement Program at BU for more than two decades. In the late 1970s, he started the Tuesday/Thursday Physical Education Program. Twice a week, students from Boston public schools with limited access to physical education facilities are bused to Boston University, where physical education certification students run classes. The program is one of the longest-running community service initiatives at BU, with more than 300 children participating every week.

"His thinking was well ahead of his years, as he used interdisciplinary activities to teach and reinforce movement," says Eileen Sullivan (SED'81), a former doctoral student of Cheffers' and now an assistant dean at Rhode Island College's Feinstein School of Education and Human Development. "He is and will remain a legend."

In 1984, Cheffers began a two-year term as director of the Australian Institute of Sport. That same year, he became president of the Association Internationale des Ecoles Superieures d'Education Physique, a post he kept until 1998.

After retiring in 2004, he moved back to Australia. ■
