Nominees should provide an unofficial transcript and a proposal no longer than four pages and written for reviewers who are not necessarily experts in their field, that:

- a) describes a problem or question that the proposed research will address and shows why the research will help to answer or illuminate it. Remember that the review committee has a broad membership.
- b) gives the approximate dates and locations of your intended travels, names specific archives or resources to be utilized and shows that permissions to access the material have been obtained (attach letters or e-mails as appropriate).
- c) clarifies how the travel, including fieldwork and/or the use of archives, resources, and other data sources, will be used to answer the problem/question.
- d) contains a budget that shows how the requested funds are expected to be spent.
- e) describes all other sources of current or pending funding that will be used to support the researcher and the proposed research.

Previous GRAF recipients must include on an extra page (5 pages total) a description of how they used the previous award, and how this new proposal builds upon and differs from the original proposal.

Departments should provide a one-page letter from either the dissertation supervisor or the Director of Graduate Studies addressing the following questions:

- a) Does the student possess the skills, including language skills, necessary to carry out the project?
- b) Is funding already available for this project or for the larger research program of which it may be a part?
- c) How does this research contribute to the student's dissertation?
