

7:15 PM, April 16, 2011

The Student Elections Commission received the following complaint from an anonymous student at 1:43 PM on April 15, 2011, assigned reference number 5:

It looks like Matthew Bae is using official CGS blog space to promote his slate. This seems to be a clear violation of the Code, which states that candidates may not utilize college government or University "space" to promote their slate.

After consideration of the complaint, the SEC has issued the following ruling:

The SEC finds with a 5-0 vote (1 abstention) that no violation of the Elections Code has taken place. The blog in question is not a part of the CGS Student Government, and the Code does not prohibit use of University space or materials for campaigning.