

Jakub Janda is Head of the Kremlin Watch Program and Executive Director at the European Values Think-Tank based in Prague. He specializes in the response of democratic states to hostile disinformation and influence operations. In 2016, he was tasked by Czech security and intelligence institutions to consult on an “Influence of Foreign Powers” chapter within an Audit of National Security conducted by the Czech government.

Igor Lukes is Professor of International Relations and History at Boston University. He writes about Europe between the world wars and about contemporary developments in East Central Europe, Russia, and the Balkans.

Joseph Wippl is a former Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) officer. He spent a 30 year career as an operations officer in the National Clandestine Service (NCS). Wippl has taught at BU since 2006, and speaks and writes widely on issues regarding intelligence.
