The Historiography of Ancient Greece and Rome: Authority and Tradition Then and Now, with Brandon Jones

9–10:30 a.m.

Join Boston University Visiting Lecturer on Classical Studies Brandon Jones to explore the prefaces and programmatic statements of more than a dozen ancient Greek and Roman historiographers in order to understand what motivated these writers of history to take up the task of collecting and preserving memory. Along the way, we will also investigate the ways in which they built and followed a tradition that still exists today, while carving out individual and authoritative niches for themselves. Our tour will make stops at the works of such historiographers as Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Polybius, Sallust, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Diodorus of Sicily, Livy, Velleius Paterculus, Tacitus, Appian, Cassius Dio, and Ammianus Marcellinus.
Minutes Matter: Realities of the Timed Patient Experience, with Shaunesse’ Jacobs
10:45 a.m.–12:15 p.m.
U.S. health care has evolved significantly over the past forty years, but patients still remain limited in the amount of time they receive from their doctors. This seminar will explore the evolution of the patient-physician relationship as work is done to offer patients holistic and personal care that exceeds 7-10 minutes per visit. Join BU School of Theology doctoral student Shaunesse’ Jacobs for a conversation that explores the care patients should receive and the accountability owed to our health care system.

Homelessness: Criminalization and Medicalization, with Megan C. Smith
1:15–3 p.m.
Homelessness in modern America is the manifestation of multiple structural failures. Individuals experiencing homelessness are often subjected to multiple coercive forces, including the criminalization and medicalization of daily life and lived experience. Join BU School of Social Work doctoral student Megan C. Smith, MSW, LCSW, for this critical discussion on how these forces interact with and compound one another—and how we can shift toward more constructive alternatives.
