IR 778: Problems in Strategic Intelligence

This course—for graduate students only—will examine a number of problem areas in strategic or national intelligence at an advanced level. It requires no prior knowledge of strategic intelligence matters, but it does presume that students understand the general nature of national security affairs and policymaking. The coverage of each subject area will begin with a discussion of the basic issues and then move on to a more detailed and critical explanation of the topic. The instructor will provide insights on the issues from personal experience or contemporary research, paying particular attention to sources and reliability of evidence. This is a particularly interesting time to study intelligence issues, since most of these topics are being debated even as we explore them. There have been a considerable number of changes in the US intelligence system, all of which are worth studying. This means that students will be expected to stay current with the media and on-line coverage of intelligence topics as well as international relations.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS: Students, working individually, will prepare a President’s Daily Brief on a current issue. Working together in teams, students also will prepare intelligence estimates (National Intelligence Estimate) on topics to be assigned. Each member of the team will give a presentation as a part of the team estimate. There will be a final examination.
