Call for Applications:
FMHT Fall 2017 Undergraduate Internship Program

The Pardee School Initiative on Forced Migration and Human Trafficking is seeking undergraduate interns for the 2017-2018 academic year! FMHT was founded in March 2015 to bring together faculty, students, practitioners, and policymakers working on the issues of Forced Migration and Human Trafficking in the Boston area and beyond. In 2016-2017 academic year, FMHT hosted twenty events for the greater BU community, expanded its network domestically and internationally, initiated Refugee Education Week in the fall and Human Trafficking Education Week in the spring, and expanded our team to include a group of 13 undergraduate interns and 2 graduate interns. Through the Jean Monnet European Union grant we have sponsored research, workshops, and lectures on the European refugee and human trafficking crises to advocate for better FMHT policies worldwide.

Interns will work alongside faculty Directors Kaija Schilde and Noora Lori as well as Graduate Chair Samantha Robertson to advance the mission of FMHT. Intern roles include: Social Media Intern, Internal Development Intern, External Development Intern, and Research and Grants Writing Intern.

Undergraduate Intern Responsibilities:
- Help plan and organize events during the 2017-2018 academic year
- Participate in outreach activities to recruit new student and faculty FMHT members
- Research and write grants to develop FMHT
- Coordinate social media and communications

Undergraduate Intern Qualifications:
- Excellent communication skills
- High level of organizational skills
- Ability to network with and recruit individuals and organizations
- Interest in issues broadly related to Forced Migration and Human Trafficking

Internships are unpaid, and require a time commitment of 5-10 hours per week. Interns may also apply for a Directed Study based on the internship to receive credit (see your academic advisor for details about this option).

If you would like to apply, please send your resume and a cover letter to migrant@bu.edu.

The application deadline is August 18th.
