

The Messy Politics of Arms Exports

Join the Pardee School Project on the Political Economy of Security for its second event of the 2017/2018 academic year. Sanne Verschuren is a Ph.D. Candidate in the Department of Political Science at Brown University. Her research focuses on the development of international norms in the context of armament, innovation in military technology and arms control. In "The Messy Politics of Arms Exports" Sanne links a state's response to public pressure on arms exports to the political configuration of the government in question.
