

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK

Full-time Tenure-Track and Tenured Positions

The Columbia University School of Social Work invites applications for multiple tenure-track and tenured positions at all ranks and all areas of expertise.

For more than 110 years, the Columbia University School of Social Work has been a leader in the education of professionals for careers in practice, policy, and administration. Located in New York City, the School offers masters and doctoral programs that are nationally and internationally recognized for their excellence. With a signature curriculum that features multidisciplinary courses taught by leading scholars and practitioners, and rich field education, CUSSW is at the forefront of clinical and community practice, social policy, and social enterprise administration education, research, and innovation in the 21st century. More information about the School can be found on its website at <http://socialwork.columbia.edu>.

CUSSW provides junior faculty with reduced teaching, generous research support, and career mentoring.

Appointments may begin on July 1, 2014 or January 1, 2015. All candidates must have a Ph.D. (in social work or in another behavioral, social science, or related discipline); those applying for foundations and clinical practice positions should have a social work master's degree and two years of practice experience. Apply through Columbia University's Recruitment of Academic Personnel System:
