Bryan Stone, Principal Investigator
The Finding Faith Today (FFT) Project is a nationwide research project that surveys and interviews adults age 18 and over who, in the past 3 years (since Jan 1, 2011), have made a new declaration of faith or otherwise signaled that they adopted a religious faith as their own (or “converted,” or “become a member,” depending on the appropriate language), even if that happens to be a “return” to faith from an earlier commitment in their lives.

An initial study was conducted on Christian populations in the United Kingdom over twenty years ago by Bishop John Finney, but surprisingly little research has been done since then. Finding Faith Today is an expansion and follow-up of that study and it will also have a comparative interfaith component that will look at those who become adherents of other major religious traditions in the U.S.

The study asks about how persons come to faith, what they understand to be the most important factors during the process, and how they understand faith, including any changes in values, practices, and lifestyles that might have accompanied this process.

95% of those who took classes found them helpful. This did not vary at all from tradition to tradition.
68% claimed to have a positive background (compared to 52% in the UK study 20 years ago).

7% claimed to have a negative background (compared to 7% in the UK).

Those who claimed a “neutral” family attitude was considerably smaller (19%) than the 36% in the UK study.

No appreciable differences among denominational families.
