• Three (3) courses in the same CAS department.
• Each course must be junior (300) level or higher, except:
  o 200 level or higher foreign language courses (not 200-level literature and civilization courses) will count (e.g. LS211, 212, and 303 will fulfill a concentration).
  o One (and only one) 100 or 200 level course will count as long as it is a prerequisite for one of the other two 300-level courses in the concentration.
  o Any other exceptions, such as having three thematically related courses in different departments count, must be petitioned through your major department.
  o History courses numbered 200 or higher can count towards a CAS concentration.
  o Students completing a CAS concentration in Computer Science may take any three 4-credit CAS CS courses 100-level or above.
  o Students completing a CAS concentration in Sociology or Philosophy may take one 100- or 200-level course toward the three-course concentration. The other two CAS courses to complete the concentration must be 300-level or higher.

• A CAS minor will take the place of a concentration as long as at least three of the minor classes are also not counted as liberal arts requirements.
• The courses counting toward the concentration cannot also count for the freshmen/sophomore liberal arts requirements.

Notes:

*Any student choosing to take a foreign language for their CAS concentration must take three courses of the same language in succession. Students may not take a combination of three different languages at any level toward the concentration. For example, LS211 (Third-Semester Spanish), LF211 (Third-Semester French) and LI211 (Third-Semester Italian) may not be taken in combination to be counted toward a CAS concentration.

Students who have placed out of the liberal arts foreign language requirement or have otherwise fulfilled this requirement may choose to start a new language track for their concentration. In these instances, the first three semesters of any given language (e.g. LS111, LS112 and LS211) may be applied toward the concentration. This is only for students who have the language requirement fulfilled and are starting a new language.
