COURSE OVERVIEW

This course examines the main political, social, economic, religious and cultural developments from the final decades of the Ming dynasty (late 16th century), through the Qing period, the Republican period, the Civil War and the establishment of the People’s Republic of China, up to the present. The course focuses on the development of the Chinese political system in the late imperial era, paying particular attention to the transformation of the Ming centralized bureaucratic system at the hand of the Manchu conquerors; the multi-ethnic nature of the Qing empire; the nineteenth century crises and their domestic and international dimensions; the attempts at reforms and the 1911 Republican revolution; the rise of the Communist movement and the establishment of the People’s Republic; the Maoist era; the current period of economic reforms on the Mainland; and the social and political developments in Hong Kong and Taiwan. All along, we will pay attention to the evolution of Confucianism, Daoism, Buddhism, and other religions, and their role in modern Chinese history; the interaction between mainstream Chinese culture and foreign and minority cultures; economic growth and cultural achievements; and family and gender relations.

GRADING AND REQUIREMENTS

The course will be conducted through lectures, films, and discussions. Requirements for the course include all reading assignments and participation in class discussion and activities (attendance: 3%; participation in class and engagement with readings: 7% of the grade), quizzes and maps (5% of the grade), a midterm exam (25%), a short paper (4-5 pages, 30% of the grade), and a final examination (30% of the grade). Exams will consist of essays, short answers/identifications, and maps. Throughout the course students will be called upon to answer specific questions relating to the weekly readings, including the occasional extra reading requirements, and to make map identifications and or/short quizzes. Attendance in all classes (including film screenings) is expected and will be recorded. Schedules, topics, and readings may be revised at times, in which case announcements will be made in class as appropriate.

No make-up or late exams (or extensions on the paper assignment) will be given, except in case of extreme emergencies, and then ONLY with adequate documentation and the instructor’s agreement that it was an emergency.
