

Archaeology at Boston University

Believing that archaeology should be a unified, inclusive, and holistic discipline, James R. Wiseman (Classics) first initiated the Journal of Field Archaeology, which continues today at BU as a leading international journal. This was followed by the establishment of an interdisciplinary Archaeological Studies Program in 1979 developed with the late Creighton Gabel (Anthropology) and Fred Kleiner (Art History) that presented archaeological research as an interdisciplinary activity drawing upon the social sciences, the natural sciences, and the humanities. This program offered the B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. in Archaeological Studies and continues as the model for today's Archaeology Program, which houses faculty from the Departments of Anthropology, Classical Studies, History, History of Art and Architecture, and Religion. The James R. Wiseman Chair in Classical Archaeology was endowed in 2006 to honor Wiseman's vision and leadership.

Our facilities include a Geographic Information System computer lab and research and teaching laboratories as well as two laboratories specializing in archaeological sciences (Environmental Archaeology, Zooarchaeology) in which faculty and student collaborate on hands-on learning and research. Collections of archaeological books, journals, maps, and photos are available in the Stone Science Library, and the Gabel Museum of Archaeology houses artifacts used in teaching, research, public outreach, and presentations in local public schools.

Research and teaching are at the heart of the Archaeology Program's mission. Faculty and students conduct research across the globe. Teaching takes place in the classroom, in the field, and less formally in student organizations such as the Boston University Undergraduate Archaeology Society and the Graduate Students Organization.
