

Selection of Research Advisor

This completed form must be turned in to Kaitlin Valli by December 10th, 2016, the last day of classes of your first term as a graduate student in the Department of Chemistry.

"One of the most important decisions facing every new graduate student in the first year, indeed, in his or her entire professional career, is selection of the major professor or research advisor. Choosing an advisor requires that you have decided on your area of intended specialization."

Each student must discuss research opportunities with at least three faculty members. Those faculty members, and your ranked preferences of advisor are to be listed below. After being informed of your match, you may officially begin work in your new research group immediately.
