What Did I Learn in Europe?

Joseph Wippl / Professor of the Practice of International Relations, Pardee School of Global Studies

Resident as an American student, a CIA professional, and as a retiree in Germany, Austria, Luxembourg and Spain, with extended periods in Belgium and the United Kingdom for a total of 17 years of my adult life, what did I learn in Europe and what did I learn about being an American? By living and residing in foreign countries and building relationships with people from other countries, you will see your own country with a different set of eyes than your fellow citizens. It gives context to the study of international affairs and to one's own life.

Open to faculty, graduate students, and visiting researchers. RSVP to edamrien@bu.edu.
