Reach History

The summer outreach dance program began over 25 years ago, when Dance Collective co-founders, Martha Armstrong Gray and Dawn Kramer came up with the idea: bring contemporary dance to children at community centers and camps by creating an intergenerational, multi-ethnic company. At Micki Taylor-Pinney's urging, Boston University, in collaboration with Mass Movement, "adopted" the program when Dance Collective disbanded.

Our multi-ethnic, multi-generational Reach company after a performance at the annual free public concert in Cambridge

The goals of Reach are twofold:

- 1) to encourage inner city teens to learn about the artistry and discipline associated with the dance field while acquiring skills for future success; and
- 2) to provide thousands of urban youth with a quality art experience.

The Impact

Engaged campers during a Motion Art workshop

Reach* impacts our teen apprentices, by teaching life skills such as collaboration, communication and discipline;

Our neighborhood children, by teaching the joy and power of using imagination, creativity and culture;

Our community, by showing how dance is a vehicle for self-expression, physical well-being and community building;

Our donors, by boosting your civic spirit and by sponsoring an affirming activity.

Reach* – bringing suburban and urban teens together to study and make dances; bringing their stories through movement to the kids in the Greater Boston neighborhoods.

By the Numbers

5 - Number of teens who received full or partial scholarships in 2016

12 - Number of performances in the Reach company's 2016 tour

31 - Number of dance workshops taught in Greater Boston's neighborhoods in 2016

31 - Number of rehearsal hours preparing for the 2016 tour

1,800 - Number of campers and staff and general public served in 2016 (That's 35,000+ campers in 25 years!)

22,000 - Amount we need to raise in individual donations and grants for 2017

Your gift will help us reach our goal and keep this program alive!
