

Summer Editorial Internship at BU School of Public Health

We tend to run our communications office much like a newsroom, so interns can expect a mix of assignments involving straight news, longer news-features and profiles, and at least one project incorporating still photos, videography, and audio production. We may ask you to collaborate on social media posts with our team, or on other tasks that help elevate the profile of the School and its faculty.

Scheduling is flexible and can be tailored to existing work and school commitments. An interest in health communications is welcomed but not required. Some previous basic reporting and writing experience is strongly recommended so that the person selected for the role will be able to dive right into a worthwhile summer experience. What we strongly encourage, above all else, is a desire to understand how public health touches nearly every facet of daily life, in ways both personal and global.

At BUSPH, our mission is to improve the health of local, national, and international populations—particularly the disadvantaged, underserved, and vulnerable—through excellence and innovation in education, research, and service.

The SPH Office of Communications plays a key role in illuminating the critical scholarship that our researchers are undertaking in environmental health, infectious diseases, global health, epidemiology, health law and management, biostatistics, maternal/child health, and urban health.