Julie Dahlstrom, Digital Servitude (work-in-progress): This Article addresses the growing phenomenon of digital servitude—forced labor practices facilitated by information and communications technology (“ICT”). With advances in technology and the internet, scholars have observed the rise of technology-facilitated human trafficking. Yet, much research remains on online sex trafficking, focusing on internet recruitment and commercial sex websites. This Article examines the emergence of digital servitude and explores how federal legal remedies in the United States could better address the realities of online forced labor.

Julie Dahlstrom and Heba Gowayed, Securing a T-Visa: An Exploration of Inequality in Trafficking Protection (work-in-progress): This mixed method empirical research project with Dr. Heba Gowayed explores the experiences of immigrant survivors who seeking immigration protection. In particular, the project examines how outcomes for the T visa, a specialized form of immigration relief for immigrant survivors of trafficking, are shaped by intersecting stratifications of race, class, gender, and other identities.
