

ADRIANNA I QUINTERO

Adrianna Quintero is a strategic leader and advocate for equitable climate change solutions, with over two decades of experience shaping policy and driving high-impact solutions at the intersection of clean energy, environmental justice, and equity. As Vice President at Energy Foundation, Adrianna leads the strategic development of programs to secure a clean and equitable energy future to combat the climate crisis.

Adrianna served on the Biden-Harris Transition Team for the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE), where she evaluated the agency's policies and practices to further our nation's approach to energy and environmental policy in a way that prioritizes community benefits and equity. She currently serves on the Secretary of Energy Advisory Board and advises on DOE's use of artificial intelligence and community engagement to advance equitable energy outcomes.

Previously, Adrianna was a Senior Attorney at the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC), where she pioneered efforts to address the disproportionate impacts of climate pollution on communities and litigated cases on pesticide safety and air quality. She is also the founder of Voces Verdes, a national coalition of Latino/a business and community leaders advocating for clean energy and climate action.

Adrianna is now expanding her focus to collaborate with organizations and innovators in the tech and climate sectors to help solve complex policy, equity, and sustainability challenges. She is passionate about leveraging her expertise to advise companies and organizations on navigating the intersection of innovation and equity to create more sustainable, just, and resilient communities.
