Exhibition to showcase photo-based work that mimics or mines advertising—ads, products, stores, and processes—and addresses issues of consumerism

AD | AGENCY

November 9, 2007 – January 27, 2008
Curated by Leslie K. Brown, PRC Curator
Opening reception, Thursday, November 8, 5:30-7:30pm

Boston, MA. The Photographic Resource Center—a non-profit gallery, education, and resource center—is pleased to present a group exhibition of photo-based work that mimics or addresses the language of advertising and product photography as well as work that mines or alters catalogues, print ads, products, stores, or literally the consumer process itself. Addressing a spectrum of consumerism issues, the work investigates the life of and power behind the objects, signs, and symbols that are marketed to us and the cycle of consumption—from branding to purchase and beyond. Not all Ad | Agency artists are completely critical of consumer culture, although some do act as agents of political and social change. They do so by holding up a mirror to consumerism as well as their own consumer habits. The artists of Ad | Agency take an active role by borrowing the trappings of advertising and promotion—the look, language, method, and sometimes even marketing avenues—in an effort to initiate an aesthetic and intellectual dialogue about this cycle of consumption, of which we are all a part. Situated somewhere between Andy Warhol and Marcel Duchamp, these artists also address issues of consumer culture aesthetically via pleasing compositions and bright “Pop Art” colors. Some artists also place emphasis on the “ready-made” object itself, partially removing the hand of the artist in order to comment on such issues.

Artists include Kate Bingaman-Burt, Dean Kessmann, Jonathan Lewis, Michael Mittelman, Matt Siber, Hank Willis Thomas, Brian Ulrich, Penelope Umbrico as well as the work of Diana Shearwood in our storefront windows. Please note that Montserrat College of Art Gallery is presenting a related exhibition, Cornucopia: Documentation of Plenty (November 9, 2007 – February 2, 2008), which includes Ulrich, and we are working to cross-promote these related, timely shows.

ABOUT THE ART AND ARTISTS

Kate Bingaman-Burt (Starkville, MS)
Kate Bingaman-Burt is “Obsessive Consumption.” As a part of this larger brand, company, website, and artistic endeavor she created, Bingaman-Burt photographed her purchases for two years. On display in the PRC gallery will be the latter Herculean effort, which includes some of her favorite purchase photos from 2002–2004 paired with a photograph of the same object in situ made in 2007. Bingaman-Burt is represented by jen bekman in New York City, where she recently had a solo show, and teaches at Mississippi State University. www.obsessiveconsumption.com

Dean Kessmann (Washington, DC)
Dean Kessmann is fascinated by mass-produced utilitarian objects. In his series “Cover to Cover,” he scanned the curled edges of contemporary art magazines. The resulting striped panoramic images emphasize the colors of what are likely full-bleed ads and recall bar codes and abstract paintings. In the series “Plastic on Paper,” he placed plastic bags, which carry logos such as Target, Safeway, and Have a Nice Day, on a scanner. Floating on a white background, the luminous bags recall embryos and the white seamless of commercial photography. They are beautiful and haunting at the same time: the bags will not decay and outlast the marketed items they carry as well as us. Represented by Conner Contemporary Art, DC, Kessmann is an Assistant Professor and coordinator of photography at George Washington University. www.deankessmann.com

Jonathan Lewis (London, UK)
Jonathan Lewis looks to the trappings and wrappings of packaging and stores. Known for his abstract line prints derived from candy wrappers featured in Blindspot, Lewis turns to photographing European “big box” stores with a low megapixel camera in his newest series “WalmArt.” After pulling the images into Photoshop, he further abstracts the composition by pixelating it; the result emphasizes a pattern of product placement and the overall look recalls abstract and Pop Art combined a distinct dose of humor. A former artist in residence at the Visual Studies Workshop in Rochester, NY, Lewis now resides in his native UK and is represented by the Bonni Benrubi Gallery, New York. www.jgdlewis.com

Holding an MFA from MassArt's Studio for Interrelated Media, Michael Mittelman is a practicing artist and Founder/ Director of the new media magazine, ASPECT. In his “SkyMall” series, Mittelman returns to his photographic roots. Finding himself traveling a great deal, he bought objects d’art from a SkyMall catalogue. He then took a photograph of the purchased item and had a company (also found in SkyMall) convert the image into a digital canvas—completing a consumer cycle within a closed and mostly mechanical system. Mittelman's works reference Duchamp's readymades and the Warholian “Factory,” weaving ideas and modes of mass and artistic production together with kitsch and humor. www.expandedfield.com

Diana Shearwood (Montreal, Canada)  Canadian photographer Diana Shearwood has been documenting our food landscape in her series “Behind the Mall.” This work is currently featured in a solo show at the Silver Eye Center for Photography and was recently published in the FOOD book, co-published by Alphabet City, Toronto, and MIT Press. Shearwood's images of advertising and industrial trucks will be installed in the PRC's storefront windows, which is on a major Boston artery upon which such vehicles travel. Her series questions the ideas of advertising by relocating commercial photographs and begins a dialogue about mass production and “food miles,” the amount of miles that food travels from its origin to our plates. www.dianashearwood.com

Matt Siber (Chicago, IL)  An MFA graduate of Columbia College, Matt Siber grew up in Brookline, MA and also holds a degree in History and Geography from the University of Vermont. In his series “The Untitled Project,” Siber creates diptychs that remind us of the ad-laden environment in which we live. In one panel we are presented with a scene in which all logos and text have been digitally removed; in the adjoining panel, the removed logos and text are placed on a white background in the approximate area from whence they came. In the other series “Compare to...,” he photographed images of various generic products that mimic brand names in look—from fonts to phrasing, to even the shape of the bottle. These vibrant images underscore the power of branding and play off of the palette as well as the look of product photography. www.siberart.com

Hank Willis Thomas (New York, NY)  One of powerHouse/ Duke University's Center for Documentary Studies 25 Under 25: New American Photographers, Hank Willis Thomas holds an MFA in photography and MA in Visual Criticism from California College of the Arts. In his series “Unbranded: Reflections in Black by Corporate America 1968-2008,” Thomas appropriated and digitally manipulated “magazine advertisements that are marketed towards an African American audience or feature Black subjects.” The resulting “unbranded” images, complete with the ads' wording and his added text, Thomas hopes will expose generalizations within advertisements. Thomas is represented by Jack Shainman Gallery, New York City. www.hankwillisthomas.com

Brian Ulrich (Chicago, IL)  Holding an MFA from Columbia College, Brian Ulrich had his first monograph published in 2006 by Aperture as part of the MP3: Midwest Photographers Project and was named one of Photo District News magazine’s “30 Emerging Photographers” in 2007. In his series “Copia,” which is subdivided into Retail, Thift, and Backrooms, Ulrich has been documenting the inside of stores, items of consumption, and consumers. Considering notions of “social class, excess, and corporate ideologies,” Ulrich began this series after 9/11, when we were urged to spend patriotically to help the US economy and combat terrorism. Ulrich is represented by Julie Saul Gallery in New York. www.notifbutwhen.com

Penelope Umbrico (New York, NY)  Holding an MFA from the School of Visual Arts, Penelope Umbrico is the Chair of the MFA Photography program at Bard College. In her series “Mirrors (from Catalogs),” she finds images of mirrors from home improvement catalogues, such as Pottery Barn and Restoration Hardware, and then photographs, perspectively corrects, and prints them at the size of the original mirror. The final pieces imply the perfect, yet erased, consumer and the idealized, yet unrealistic home. In another series, "Instances of Books as Pedestals (Some Extreme)," Umbrico gathered images of stacked books from similar catalogues. Ironically, the stacks are often comprised of art books, upon which are placed glasses and mugs full of coffee, wine, or brandy. Umbrico is represented by Bernard Toale Gallery, Boston, MA. www.penelopeumbrico.net
